++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Disruptive winds or snow for some areas today.

Today:
Heavy rain across Northern Ireland and southwest UK continues eastwards, accompanied by squally gale force winds. Rain turning to snow mainly across northern hills, heavy with drifting and blizzards. Severe gales following to southwestern parts, despite brighter skies and showers.

Tonight:
Rain and snow in the north easing. Further bands of showery rain for many. Gales continuing for some, severe in the southwest. Lighter winds in central UK. Less cold.

Wednesday:
Bands of showery rain will continue to affect many areas at times, although a few brighter spells for many. Gales in southwest and far northeast easing. Less cold in north.

Outlook for Thursday to Saturday:
Mainly unsettled with showers or longer spells of rain although occasionally brighter in the east. Often windy and rather cold though snow mainly restricted to high ground in the north.
